Surviving in the Andes

On October 13, 1972, a plane crashed into an Andes mountain. Some passengers managed to survive. Walking in freezing temperatures, the survivors sought shelter inside the wreckage. They had little food and no hope of rescue.

Two months later, three passengers named Roberto Canessa, Nando Parrado, and Antonio Vizintin decided to find help. The journey was hard and tiring. However, instead of finding an escape, they saw more icy peaks.

But hope remained. Parrado saw two snow-free peaks about 65 kilometers away. Vizintin went back to the plane due to the lack of food while the others decided to keep going. Fortunately, they found a small river and felt the warmth of the sun. The snow disappeared, replaced by colorful flowers. Canessa exclaimed, "This is the valley! This is the way out."

Ten days later, on December 21st, the exhausted men arrived in the town of Los Maitenes in Chile. A rescue team came to save the other passengers in the high Andes.

They all survived while waiting for help. The memories of the crash stayed with them, but their suffering was over.

21. The survivors didn't have enough food in the Andes mountain.
22. Three of the survivors decided to find help after 1 month.
23. Vizintin returned to the crash site because he lost hope.

Imagine you have a smartphone and you want to stay in a hotel. What if you don't need a hotel key, or even have to wait at the Registration desk, to enter your room? You can just use your phone to open the door! That's the idea of a hotel company that wants to send digital keys to guests' phones via an app instead of giving them the normal and easy to lose plastic cards. Guests could arrive and go straight to their rooms without waiting at Reception Desk. The hotel company has more than 1,000 hotels in many countries. It plans to try the system soon at two of its hotels – one in New York City and one in California. The app will work with new iPhone models and new Android phones. The app will use Bluetooth to unlock the room with a touch. The hotel company thinks this will be the new way that people will want to enter a hotel.

21. In their new invention, what will the company send to guests?

A. digital key

B. plastic card

C. QR code

22. With the new invention, what do guests need to do to receive rooms?

A. Wait at Reception Desk
